8th May – A local resident has reported that several children have been added to an online group chat that has raised concerns. The nature of the messages suggests it may be an inappropriate attempt to contact young people. North Yorkshire Police are aware of the situation. An officer has visited the reporting family, and the matter is now being investigated. Due to the sensitive nature of the enquiry, further details cannot be shared at this time.
Importantly, the investigation team have assessed that there is no immediate risk to children. However, as a precaution, families are encouraged to remain aware of online activity. It may be helpful for parents and carers to speak with their children about who they are communicating with online and to ensure they are not part of any group chats involving unknown individuals.
If you have any concerns that a child in your family may have been contacted or added to a suspicious group, please contact police on 101 and provide as much detail as possible.
